Infants' Sense of People focusses on infants during their first year of life, exploring how they begin to think about other people, their feelings, emotions and intentions, and how they become aware of these aspects of their own development. Drawing on a broad range of research and developmental theory, Maria Legerstee takes the view that infants have an innate sense of people at birth, which is activated through sympathetic emotions. She questions the idea that infants use physical

Infants Sense of People: Precursors to a Theory of Mind

Do infants start out with an understanding of the physical world, out of which they differentiate the social world, or is the sense of people different from the start? Dr. Legerstee takes a constraint constructivist point of view postulating three predispositions that give infants a head start in developing a ToM.
